自転車に関する法律について重要なお知らせ

Due to a recent change in Kyōto Prefecture's traffic laws, as of November, anyone found to be using a cellphone or smartphone or wearing headphones, earbuds, or other such devices while riding a bicycle will be considered to be in violation of the law.

Doing the aforementioned activities while riding a bicycle reduces cyclists' ability to be aware of their surroundings and poses a danger to both pedestrians and other bicycles and vehicles. Violators will be fined up to ¥50,000.

Note from the Editor

へんしゅうしゃのことば

When many people think December, they think Christmas. In America, unlike in Japan, Christmas is a public holiday. Hence, most restaurants are not open. However, Chinese restaurants usually do not close, so there is a stereotype that people who do not celebrate Christmas, such as myself, eat Chinese food on Christmas.

Although Christmas is not a holiday in Japan, there is the Emperor's birthday. If you can go to Tōkyō on that day, make sure to visit the Imperial Palace. For details, check the following page.

The Emperor's Birthday

てんのう たんじょうび
天皇の誕生日December 23rd

As the name suggests, this holiday celebrates the birth of Emperor Akihito. It is one of only two days every year that the Imperial Palace is open to the public, the other being January 2nd. The Emperor and his family make a public appearance and give a speech, thanking visitors for their wishes of good health. The sight of all the visitors vigorously waving the small Japanese flags they are provided with makes for a memorable experience.

Christmas

クリスマス

December 25th

Although Japan does not celebrate Christmas in the same way as the West, it does have its own unique customs. Christmas in Japan is a romantic time when many young people take their significant other out to a light display or other date. Christmas is also celebrated by families, who buy ornate Christmas cakes to eat together on Christmas Eve. Gift exchanges also take place, although not on the same scale as in the West. Perhaps the most notable custom of Japanese Christmas is that of going out to eat at Kentucky Fried Chicken; in fact, some KFC stores even require reservations!

New Year's Day

がんにじつ
元日January 1st

New Year's Day is an important holiday in Japan. There are many customs and rituals associated with not only New Year's Day, but the days preceding and following it as well. The first three days of the year are referred to as sanganichi or shōgatsu. During these three days, people make their first shrine visits of the year (hatsumōde), visit friends and relatives, drink sake, and eat special dishes called osechi. Children receive gifts of money called otoshidama from their parents in special envelopes, play Japanese card games and badminton, and fly kites. Another popular custom is eating rice cakes called mochi, which are made by a pounding process called mochitsuki.
