Announcement Regarding Japanese Encephalitis Vaccine

にほんのうえん よぼうせつしゅ し
日本脳炎の予防接種のお知らせ

Those born between April 2nd, 1995 and April 1st, 2007 (ages 8 to 19 this fiscal year) are eligible to receive a vaccination for Japanese encephalitis until two days before their 20th birthday.

Those who will turn 8 or 9 years old this fiscal year (those born between April 2nd, 2005 and April 1st, 2007) in particular should receive the booster shot for the first dose as soon as possible. In addition, those who will turn 18 years old this fiscal year (those born between April 2nd, 1996 and April 1st, 1997) should receive the second dose as soon as possible.

The first dose of the vaccine is given 6 to 89 months after birth, with the second dose following between ages 9 and 12. However, from June 1st, 2005 through the 2009 fiscal year, the vaccination was not recommended due to reports of serious side effects. As a result, some people were not able to receive the vaccination at the appropriate time. Following that period, a new vaccine was developed and vaccinations resumed.

Those who have not finished receiving their first dose should begin from there.

▼First Dose

◆People Who Have Not Received Any Shots

First dose, initial: Two shots 6 days apart

First dose, booster: One shot at least 6 months after finishing initial shots

※These are the typical Japanese encephalitis vaccination periods

◆People Who Have Received One Shot

Two shots at least 6 days apart

◆People Who Have Received Two Shots

One shot at least 6 days following the second shot

▼Second Dose

One shot at least six days after completing the first dose (available for ages 9 and above)

※Vaccination is free.

Note from the Editor
へんしゅうしゃのことば

In Japan, May 5th is known as “Children’s Day.” This day is also special in America, where it is referred as “Cinco de Mayo.” Cinco de Mayo commemorates a historical event from long ago. That event took place not in America, however, but in Mexico.

Why would Mexican history be celebrated in America? Even more oddly, Cinco de Mayo is said to be more popular in the United States than in Mexico! In today’s globalized world, it’s becoming increasingly common for countries to borrow from each other’s cultures – a fact that is true of Japan as well.

Festivals and National Holidays さいじつ・きょうじ

Constitution Memorial Day

けんぽうきねんび
憲法記念日
May 3rd

This holiday commemorates the adoption of the Constitution of Japan on May 3rd, 1947. It is the only day of the year on which the National Diet Building in Tōkyō is open to the general public.

Greenery Day

みどりのひ
みどりの日
May 4th

Greenery Day was celebrated on April 29th between 1989 and 2006, but changed to its current date in 2007. As the name suggests, this holiday is devoted to thinking about and treasuring nature.

Children's Day

こどものひ
こどもの日
May 5th

Children's Day, established in 1948, is based off of an ancient holiday called Tango no Sekku, or Boys' Day. This day is an opportunity for parents to celebrate the happiness and health of their children. Sets of armor and special dolls are set up around the house, and many people fly koinobori, or carp streamers.

Aoi Festival

あおいまつり
葵祭
May 15th

Also known as the Kamo Festival, the Aoi Festival is one of the three main festivals of Kyōto, along with the Festival of the Ages in October and the Gion Festival in July. It originated in the 6th century AD as a way to appease Shintō deities following a succession of misfortunes in Kyōto. Today, the festival features a procession of hundreds of people dressed as Heian-era courtiers walking through Kyōto. The procession begins at 10:30 at the Imperial Palace, heads for Shimogamo Shrine, and finally ends at Kamigamo Shrine at approximately 15:30. Seats may be reserved at the Imperial Palace and both shrines. Those who do not reserve seats should go early in order to see the procession go through any of those points.
