What is Long-term Care Insurance?

When people hear the word "long-term care insurance," many people think about the premiums that are deducted from their paychecks at age 40. In reality, the long-term care insurance system was established in 2000 as a mechanism to financially support care for the elderly as a society. This type of insurance is available to persons 65 years old or older that need nursing care, but it is also available to those who are between 40 and 64 years old and have certain diseases that also require a special level of care.

In addition to in-home care support and in-home services, services available through long-term care insurance include home-visit care and daily living assistance (help with cleaning, laundry, shopping, cooking, etc.), in-home nursing, bathing assistance, and at-home physical rehabilitation conducted by a elderly care employees or nurses.

Seika Town Mascot Kyōmachi Seika

"Let's strive to create a society where anyone of any age can live in comfort!"

There are also elderly day services (which provide support for meals and bathing, maintenance and improvement of physical and mental functions, and oral function training), daycare services (where physical and occupational therapists provide rehabilitation for independence in daily life), and dementia daycare. Short-stay facilities (stays at facilities that provide meals, bathing, and rehabilitation support to reduce the burden on caregivers and prepare for moving into facilities) are another service provided through this insurance. People that need another level of medical care can receive it at certain facilities, such as special nursing homes for the elderly (tokuyou), geriatric health care facilities for the elderly (rouken), and other long-term care medical care facilities. There are plenty of differences between these services. Definitely too long to attempt to list here!

Services related to welfare equipment (rental of nursing beds and wheelchairs) and home renovations are also subsidized by the long-term care insurance.

If you have a family doctor, consult with them about receiving care. If you do not have a

Town News

Beware of Vaccine-related Fraud

In Japan, a number of people have recently been experiencing fraudulent interactions related to the coronavirus vaccine. Stay up to date on the latest vaccine information to keep yourself and others from falling victim. Below are some fraudulent interactions you may encounter.

Example 1

A person claiming to be an employee of a local public health center calls your mother's house and tells her that she can receive the vaccine if she deposits 100,000 yen into a specified account. The suspicious caller reassures your mother that she will get the money back.

Example 2

You get a phone call at home with an automated, robotic voice saying you can receive the coronavirus vaccine for free and asking if you rent or own your house.

Example 3

You receive an email saying you can get priority vaccination. The mail includes the Prime Minister's name and a URL.

You may also encounter any of the following interactions:

- An email with a subject line that makes it seem like an official correspondence about receiving money and asking for a response.
- An email posing as correspondence from the local government office asking to input your bank account information.
- A phone call from someone posing as a representative from a coronavirus task force asking for personal information.

What should you do in these situations?

If you receive suspicious phone calls or visits from a person claiming to be from the government or a company claiming to be doing business on behalf of the government do not respond to them. The same goes for any suspicious emails you receive from unknown addresses.

Should you receive a phone call from someone claiming to be from the government or a financial institution, hang up the phone, and dial from a number you researched yourself.

Sensational in Seika!

Getting to the "Root" of the Raku-imo Potato

The raku-imo potato is a special type of root vegetable that is grown in Seika Town. Of the yamaimo variety of potatoes, the slightly sweet raku-imo contains less water than a typical nagaimo while maintaining a strong, starchy viscosity. Raku-imo seeds are normally planted in May or June and take nearly 6 months to grow to a harvestable size. During the half-year period, the plant's vines typically grow long and wide enough to provide shade, creating a natural "green curtain" that can provide relief from the harsh summer heat. The leaves of the raku-imo vines cut off approximately 80% of the heat from the suns rays and help keep the area cool. Come to Seika Town Office if you would like to see raku-imo and the green curtain in person!

Rikka is the Japanese word for the first day of summer. This day usually falls on May 5th or the 6th. This summer is looking to be another one where mask wearing is required. Remember to drink lots of water and to take off your mask only when you're able to maintain social distance outdoors.
